In RE: Claim number SA [REDACTED]

Dear Justice Silverstein,

I write you today due to the several-month delays by the BSA and their insurance companies. My opinion is that this is a miscarriage of justice. For decades, the BSA covered up and protected Boy Scout Leaders by ignoring complaints, threatening victims, and/or moving a suspected child molester to another troop and of course doing shoddy background checks or altering leaders' applications to make it difficult to do background checks.

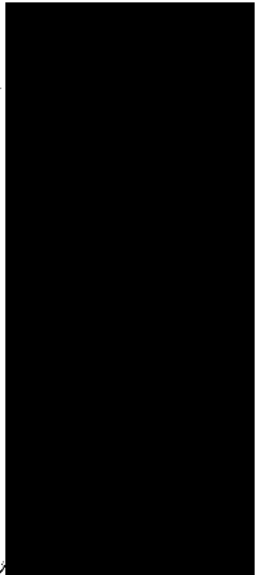

I had two predators: [REDACTED] who was a Boy Scout Leader in Troop [REDACTED] who cornered me in the back room while people were distracted during a pine wood car derby and also [REDACTED] my cub scout leader, who forced her hands down my pants under the guise of tucking in my already tucked in shirt.

When I was in Cub Scouts, I was molested by a "known predator" according to the BSA. In fact, then Executive Director, [REDACTED] of the Las Padres Boy Scout Council both protected accused predators and made false CPS reports to discredit and intimidate my family when my mom reported [REDACTED]. [REDACTED] told my mom not to call law enforcement and became irritated when she insisted. By then it was almost too late. [REDACTED] both warned [REDACTED] and then reported my mom and dad to CPS claiming they were intentionally exposing my older brother and me to a "known child predator". My mom was told by CPS that the caller demanded my parents have criminal charges against them and for me and my older brother be put in foster care. The problem was that only the BSA knew [REDACTED] was a predator and no one else. Later, [REDACTED] confessed to the BSA attorneys that he had made the false report to CPS. I was still afraid to tell anyone what [REDACTED] and [REDACTED] had done to me.

I was scared and felt guilty for not telling my mom what [REDACTED] had done to me earlier in the year. I felt like it was my fault that [REDACTED] had molested my brother. It turned out that the Sheriff's Department discovered he had molested several children before me or my brother. Many in the BSA, including parents and boy scouts terrorized my family with repeated death threats in person and on the phone all day and night. It was especially worse one or two days, including at night, before [REDACTED] next court appearance. [REDACTED] would even park in front of our home and wait at our school to stalk us. Then, after my mom and dad refused to back down, my mom's tires were repeatedly slashed. A few weeks later, someone cut her car's brake lines hoping for her to get killed driving home from work. She couldn't afford to buy a new car for awhile and had to take the bus to work.

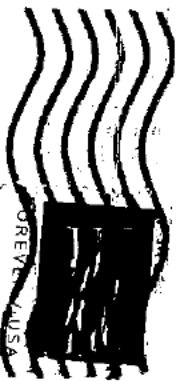

I also wish that the BSA had protected children instead of the predators in their "perversion files". Please make the BSA and their insurance companies settle this so I and other victims of BSA can start to heal.

Thank you, Client SA [REDACTED]
